"Give God the Day"

Ever had one of those days that kept you up the night before? I've noticed that I actually have many more of those than I have days that keep me up the night after. Worry exacts payment in advance and offers no refund when the dreaded events don't happen.

A friend told a story recently of attending a family function. Norman Rockwell painted some wonderful scenes of American family life, and they tend to be accurate at about the same frequency as a full planetary alignment. My friend's family gatherings too often included at least a bit of drama. Worry about the coming day plagued her the night before.

Rising the next morning she prayed for God's peace, and off she went. Everyone gathered... and had a good, calm time. I had anticipated hearing about relatives behaving badly, perhaps a 911 call. But no. My friend said that everything went off without a tragic hitch. Norman would have been proud.

She learned a little bit about her family that day. They could have a good time without complications. She learned more about God. Summing it all up she paused and said, "Give the day to God in the morning, and thank Him for it at night."

"Give the day to God in the morning, and thank Him for it at night." I like that. Too many nights I've burned through wrestling with life that hasn't happened yet. Ironically, almost always the dreaded day never happens.

A different friend told me "you will have 360 good days this year. You'll only have 5 genuinely bad days." He's right. Those 5 days are when I hear about the death of a friend, or a sickness, or something else genuinely sad. The problem is I forfeit many nights sure that one of those five days is tomorrow. It almost never happens the way I feared. Interestingly, even when one of the five happens, I've discovered that God has given me what I need to survive and learn from it.

Let's try to wait until the morning to really consider the new day. And in the quiet dawn let's simply give the day to God, and in the quiet final moments of the night let's thank Him for the way He guided us through it.

And tomorrow: repeat.

Grace,
Terry Ellis

We express our sincere sympathy to Rusty and Marsha Jabour on the death of his father.

Congratulations

Kenneth and Allison Roark on the adoption of their son, Matthew David Langzhou Roark.

As the summer winds down and a new school year begins, it's the perfect time to define a routine, and put it into practice. Do you have friends or family that don't attend church? Now is the perfect time to invite them to attend Broadmoor Baptist, and to include church in their routine. Fresh Start Sunday is August 16, with Sunday School at 9:15 a.m., Worship at 10:30 a.m., and the Deacon Ice Cream Social at 6:00 p.m. The following Wednesday, August 19, Dr. Ellis will begin his new series, "Bible Basics: A fresh look at the scriptures." Youth and Children's activities also resume. Let's start a new season together!
