"Comin' Down the Aisle"

Chris George, a dear friend of mine, who is presently pastor of Smoke Rise Baptist Church in Stone Mountain, Georgia, wrote the following article about how church "members" should respond to the invitation. During lunch together last week at our annual CBF meeting, he shared with me his idea and I asked for his permission to reprint the article.

Grace,
Terry Ellis

Comin' Down the Aisle

I was really touched that she waited in line to shake my hand and share her comment.

"Your message touched me deeply." I smiled and expressed appreciation for her words. Then, she added a quick apology, "I am so sorry that no one came down the aisle. Someone really should have come because it was such a good sermon."

I understood her sentiments and was grateful for her sensitivity. In Baptist churches, we have a tendency to judge a sermon based on the response of the people in the pews. If we have six folks join the church, the preacher clearly delivered a dynamite sermon. If no one moves during the Invitation Hymn, people in the congregation feel sorry for the lonely pastor standing beside the alter table.

Although we are always excited when someone expresses a desire to join the church, this response is not the only way to measure God's movement in our midst. We have a terrible tendency to focus on one-way traffic on Sunday morning, looking closely at those who may be walking forward down the aisle.

As your Pastor, I want you to know that I am equally concerned about the rest of us who are walking back out into the world. Does our worship impact and influence our actions when we leave this place? The invitation at the end of the worship service is not only for those finding faith for the first time or moving their letter of membership. The invitation is for all of us as God continues to touch and transform our lives, making us a little more like Jesus each week.

God's work in our world does not begin and end with the worship service or sermon. God's work in our world begins when the Body of Christ goes forth to share God's love with our community.
