The Nowruz – Persian New Year – (Iran) commemorates New Years Day as a day the world and humanity are re-created. On Nowruz, the world is renewed. The king proclaims: “Here is a new day of a new month of a new year; what time has worn must be renewed.” Time had “worn” the human being, society, and cosmos. Sacred time had become profane time. It had to be destroyed in order to reconnect with the mythical moment the world had come into existence, bathed in a “pure,” “strong,” and sacred time.

The ending of profane pas-time happens by rituals signifying the “end of the world.” On the last day of the year the universe was dissolved in the primordial waters (chaos), a time before re-creation. By repeating their creation story at New Years, participants believed the old world/year was literally re-created. Old grievances and sins disappeared, and everything that soiled the new, good creation (new year) was destroyed. By participating in New Year’s rituals, people, too, were considered “newborn.”

Every December 31, we participate in New Year rituals. We sing “Auld Lang Syne” asking if old acquaintances should be forgotten with the outgoing old year. We reply with a resounding “No!” Instead, we toast our past experiences, sacred times, places, and faces.

Whereas Nowruz celebrates the world/universe created anew every year, we celebrate Christmas every year, and Easter,

Independence Day, etc. The purpose of circular rituals is to draw us closer to the sacred, the moment when history/creation was at its purist, unsullied as a new-born baby, before the clutter of sin and ... chaos. Only, our modern, scientific minds (and perhaps beliefs) hinders believing that each year the world is re-made. Still, we commemorate “special time”: day we married, day our child was born, day the towers fell. We mark sacred spaces: where we were baptized, had our first kiss, where the towers stood. Is it purely for memory? Or is something now “different” about that time and space? “I had no idea this was holy ground!” (Genesis 28).

A man I know says that, as a child he used to cut through cemeteries on his way to friends. His mother warned him not to step on tombs. “They’re sacred.” He said, “Mama, I can’t see the tombs. How do I know if it’s sacred?” She replied, “Just treat it all as sacred space.”

Maybe it isn’t that space and time become special ... maybe they have always been, but we are only now waking up to it as such. Whether the world becomes new every year, or each time we remember God it makes all of it special – when we remember, we treat it special. As you close the old and begin anew, remember to treat all of it as sacred. Happy New Year! New time. New space. New you.

Did You Know?

Did you know that the Magi (aka: Wise Men) likely arrived weeks, months, or even up to two years after Jesus' birth, and not on the traditional night of? This is based on the fact that Herod's massacre was for boys up to age two. If this is the case, then the Magi would have visited a "young child," not an infant in a stable. And if this is the case, then the Epiphany event we celebrate the first week of January 2026 is pertaining to the Christmas event of ... 2024 ! Now you know.
